

I'm Speaking at KScope21!

Well, another year and another huge disappointment that we won't all be able to get together in Nashville, but I am still very grateful that we are able to share ideas. I decided to take a year off from speaking for many reasons, but because of the interest in Groovy, I was asked to join the presentation team and discuss the completely awesome options we have at our fingertips. I am very grateful that people value and benefit from my sharing, so I really couldn't say no. It is always tough and extremely competitive to be chosen to speak and when you are asked, it is hard to pass on the opportunity.

I really hope you all can participate and join us, and I hope to see you involved at this great conference. For those interested, head over to KScope21 and check out what you will be missing if you don't attend.
